How to get to Ghent

Airport

Brussels Airport is connected to many airports across Europe and is the easiest way to reach Ghent.

Brussels Airport South (Charleroi) is used by low-cost airlines (e.g. Ryanair), but the connection to Ghent is less optimal.

From airport to Ghent

By train

At Brussels Airport there is a railway station at the bottom floor, from where you can take a direct train to Gent-St-Pieters (the main railway station). There are 2 direct trains per hour (one at xx:01 or xx:03 (55-57 minutes travel) and one at xx:24 (± 1.5 hour travel)), or you can take a train to Brussel-Zuid/Midi (takes about 20 minutes) and take a direct train to Ghent from there on, which takes another 30 minutes. For more information about the timetables, please visit: <http://www.belgianrail.be/en/Default.aspx>.

From Brussels Airport South (Charleroi), you will first need to take a taxi or airport bus (2 per hour) to the train station from Charleroi (Charleroi Sud). From there you can take a train to Brussel-Zuid/Midi and change there to Gent-St-Pieters. For more information about the timetables, please visit: <http://www.belgianrail.be/en/Default.aspx>.

By car

From Brussels Airport follow the E19 until the interchange in Maalbeek to continue on the E40 until Ghent.

From Brussels Airport South (Charleroi) follow the E420, to the E19 to Brussels until the interchange in Maalbeek to continue on the E40 until Ghent.

When driving to Ghent, please be informed that since April 2017 a new Circulation Plan has been approved, which divides the city in different sectors which cannot longer be crossed. More information can be found here: <https://stad.gent/ghent-international/mobility-ghent/circulation-plan>.

By train

There are several international trains (ICE, Thalys, TGV) per day arriving in Brussels from Germany or France. For more info: <https://www.interrail.eu/en/plan-your-trip/interrail-timetable>
